AGNON, REALIST AUTHOR, WINS FIRST NOBEL PRIZE FOR ISRAEL, SHARING LITERATURE AWARD OF $60,000 WITH NELLY SACHS, LYRICAL DRAMATIC POET; BOTH OVER SEVENTY YEARS OF AGE; BOTH JEWS

The Swedish Academy announced that this year's Nobel prize for literature is being shared between two Jewish writers — Samuel Joseph Agnon, who is 78 and lives in Jerusalem, and Miss Nelly Sachs, who is 75 and lives in Stockholm, where she took refuge from the Nazis in 1940, says the London Times. The Academy praised Agnon for his "profoundly characteristic narrative art" depicting the life of the Jewish people and Nelly Sachs "for her outstanding lyrical and dramatic writing, which interprets Israel's destiny with touching strength".

The award, which will be presented by King Gustaf in Stockholm on December 10, is this year worth 420,000, sixty-thousand dollars.

In a broadcast a member of the Academy said that the sharing of the award had its special justification. The Academy wished to honour two writers who, although they wrote in different languages, were united in a spiritual kinship and complemented each other in "a splendid striving to present the cultural heritage of the Jewish people by the written word, and from a common source of inspiration which in them has proved to be a vital power".

Calling Agnon an aged classical author, the Academy said that he was a realist, "but there is always a mystical admixture which lends to even the greyest and grimmest scenes a golden outline of strange fairy-tale poetry".

Nelly Sachs was a writer of convincing worth and burning sincerity. "With moving intensity of feeling she has given voice to the Jewish race's world-wide-tragedy, which she expressed in lyrical laments of a painful beauty."

Shmuel Yosef Agnon, speaking with some timidity, said to a correspondent who called on him some weeks ago in Jerusalem that he felt "like a man sitting in a cellar who is astonished when they open the door and the finds there is still light." He is the first Israeli to win a Nobel prize.

"In the same way", he told his visitor, "I am astonished that there is still interest in me."

Agnon is not unduly modest about his tales, which have delighted Hebrew readers for fifty years, but he feels lonely and abandoned as an author whose public was torn away from him when the Nazis destroyed European Jewish civilization, says the London Times. "I miss the Torah sages, writers, artists and humble readers who used to sit and read and enjoy every word", he said.

Written with painstaking care in old-fashioned Hebrew Agnon's prose is not particularly suited to the rising generation of Israelis. "The young generation has other interests", he said. "I am not a modern writer. I am astounded that I have even one reader."

Speaking of the Nobel award, he said somewhat ruefully that he had been awarded the prize on the strength of one-fortieth of his work, as most of his stories have never been translated from the Hebrew. His style is, in fact, most difficult to render. His works are compulsory reading in Israel secondary schools and universities and the younger generation of Hebrew writers is brought up on them, but none has attempted to imitate them. It is thus that he has achieved the unique distinction of being regarded as a classic during his lifetime.

Agnon was born Shmuel Yosef Czaczkes in Poland. His present name was a pen name which he adopted as a family name. He lived in Israel between 1908 and 1913 and then went to Berlin, where he remained until 1924. He returned to Israel in that year, says the London Times. He speaks no English, but says this has the advantage of keeping away people who might interfere with his work.

Nelly Sachs fled from her native Berlin just before the Nazis prepared to place her in a concentration camp. With the help of Prince Eugen of Sweden and Selma Lagerlöf, the authoress, she escaped to Stockholm and has made her home there ever since. She is now a Swedish subject.

She came of a liberal Jewish family of manufacturers who encouraged her love of the arts. She has won a number of Swedish, German and international awards for her works.

On her seventieth birthday anniversary a fund named in her honour was established in Dortmund to help to finance young authors. Last October, she received the German booksellers' "Peace Prize" in a Frankfurt ceremony. She said then that she believed in the new generation of Germans although many of her family had died in German concentration camps.

The central theme of her later writings is the ordeal of German Jews during the Hitler era. Her first publication appeared in 1921. In the decade before Hitler rose to power she became noted in Germany for her expressionist lyrics, says the London Times. She has translated much contemporary Swedish verse into German.

After the meeting of the Academy, Dr. Anders Osterling chairman of its Nobel Committee, says the New York Times, went on the radio to praise the two laureates as writers who "complement each other in a splendid striving to present the cultural heritage of the Jewish people."

Apparently alluding to criticism of the Academy for choosing little-known authors, Dr. Osterling said Mr. Agnon's "reputation as the foremost writer in modern Hebrew literature has gradually penetrated linguistic barriers."

Praising him as a "deeply original writer" about Eastern European Jewish life, Dr. Osterling cited "The Bridal Canopy" for a combination of reality and legend that he said produced with earthy humor a Jewish counterpart of "Don Quixote."

"But perhaps his greatest achievement," he added, is the novel, "A Guest For The Night," which tells of a visit to a war-ruined town of the author's childhood and of vain attempts to assemble the congregation in the synagogue.

Of Miss Sachs, Dr. Osterling said her poetry had "become the most intense artistic expression of the Jewish spirit's reaction to suffering in our time."

He said she had expressed the tragedy of the Jewish people "in lyrical laments of a painful beauty," evoking the imagery of extermination but then rising above all hatred of persecutors to reveal a deep sorrow at man's debasement.

Dr. Osterling mentioned only one of her works by name, the radio play, "Eli," which tells of an eight-year-old boy who is beaten to death by a Nazi soldier in Poland.

A new collection of Miss Sachs's poetry is due to be published in German on December 10, her 75th birthday and the day on which she and Mr. Agnon will receive the Nobel awards in Stockholm.

Agnon received his Nobel Prize after two days of congratulations. He expressed his feelings with a hospitality that kept a Swedish diplomat from his next appointment, says James Feron, of the New York Times. The 78-year-old author, who writes in Hebrew, was so delighted that the news had finally been confirmed in Stockholm that he refused to let any well-wisher, official or otherwise, leave his dining room.

"Next time I win the Nobel Prize," he told Carl-Erhard Lindahl, the Swedish Chargé d'affaires, "I hope you are again the man to come and tell me so."

Mr. Lindahl had read the citation to Mr. Agnon in Hebrew and then added a plea that the author would be able to go to Stockholm to receive the prize "personally from the King."

The author added that it would give him special pleasure "because there is a special benediction one says before a king, and I have never met a king."

The closest, he said, was "once when the Emperor Franz Joseph was being visited by kings I was splattered by mud when the carriages went by."

The writer probably had more guests in his house during the week than in the last year. Rumors began circulating and finally Kol Israel, the state radio, gave it semi-official sanction by quoting the Swedish radio. Israeli leaders sent their congratulations and the usually secluded author cringed with each message.

He apologized to the Swedish Chargé d'affaires and said "we are a somewhat impatient people." Mr. Agnon added with a smile that "with this impatience we waited thousands of years for the state, but still we are impatient."

Mr. Agnon, a small, shy man, was surrounded by his family as he shared first cognac and then coffee and cake with Mr. Lindahl and other guests. One of the telephone calls was from the United States, says the New York Times. "Hello, Esther, shalom," Mr. Agnon said into the receiver. "It's Esther Appleburg from America," one relative told another.

"The Swedish Ambassador is here and the house is full of guests," Mr. Agnon said in a louder voice. Finally he shouted, apparently at an operator, "Yes, yes, it's me, Shmuel Yosef Agnon," and gave up the conversation.

The Swedish diplomat tried to leave graciously, saying he had to get to the airport, but Mr. Agnon waved great trays of cakes into the gathering.

Finally Mr. Lindahl stood up but Mr. Agnon pressed a slice of cake into his hand, saying, "Eat the cake — eat, eat fast." Mr. Lindahl ate standing up.

"I hope the next time you come with the prize you will stay longer," Mr. Agnon said.

"I don't believe it, it can't be true," he kept saying. "It's only rumors." The telephone rang constantly in his home in Talpiot, a secluded section of Jerusalem where he has lived for four decades. He finally said to his son-in-law, who was answering it: "Are you writing down their names? I may have to apologize later." The 78-year-old writer need not apologize now, with the official news that he has shared this year's Nobel Literature Prize with Nelly Sachs, a German-born Jew living in Stockholm.

Even before the announcement was made to Mr. Agnon by a Swedish diplomat who thoughtfully read the citation in Hebrew, the Israeli author was pressed to say how he felt about the possibility he might win the prize.

"Let me tell you a story," he replied, characteristically. "Recently I attended a celebration in a synagogue and the rabbi there said about me to the group:

"Do you know who this man is? This man is the greatest poet in the world. No, what am I saying, he is the greatest poet in Israel. No, he is greatest poet in Talpiot."

Mr. Agnon said: "This I accept." He has felt for many years that his words could not have carried much beyond Talpot, says the New York Times. He told a visitor only a month before he was to receive international recognition that he felt like a man who sat in the cellar and was astonished when the door was opened to see some light still.

"In the same way," he told the visitor, who had come to write about him, "I am astonished that there is still interest in me."

Like many men who came to Palestine in the early days of the century, Shmuel Yosef Agnon was a product of Eastern Europe. He was born in the little town of Buczacz in eastern Galicia on July 17, 1888. Unlike the Ben-Gurions and the Eshkols, however, he withdrew from the ideals of Zionism and a political state to the tiny Hebrew script of his mystical writing.

"When I approached the age of fifty," he said, "I thought to cut off contact with the world. When I entered this house I would rise every morning with the first rays of the sun and I would look at the Dead Sea and the Judean Hills."

But Jerusalem has grown to envelop the author, and both seem now to show a mixture of worldliness and naivete.

Occasionally he is asked his opinion of the border situation or the budget crisis, but it is no use. If he reads, it is the Talmud or, when it is recommended to him, the work of an Israeli colleague.

Sometimes his work is compared to that of Kafka, and this has become a source of irritation to him. The implication is that he borrowed Kafka's style. But Agnon's work of the type was written in Yiddish in 1908, five years before Kafka published his first significant work.

Mr. Agnon, according to some who have studied both, has developed a style that bridges the gap between traditional Hebrew and European literature. His stories, in Hebrew, contain peculiar and mysterious plots and dialogues enabling him to appeal both to young readers, says the New York Times, and to admirers in Jerusalem's most Orthodox religious quarters. Each catches different echoes of the same sound.

He remains even now more of a Jewish writer than an Israeli writer.

His father was descended from a long line of Talmudic scholars and the boy was infused with religious lore. He published his first verses in Hebrew and Yiddish when he was fifteen. He went to Israel five years later.

In 1913 he left for Berlin to study and there, six years later, married Esther Marx. They moved to Jerusalem in 1924 and have, except for a brief period, lived there ever since. They have a son and a daughter.

Protest Against Soviet In Orderly Way, Urges Z.O.A. Head; Charges Arab Students In U.S. With Vicious Anti-Semitism

The head of the Zionist Organization of America warned that it was dangerous to compare the fate of Soviet Jews to what happened in Nazi Germany. Jacques Torczyner, re-elected later as president of the 100,000-member organization cautioned Jews, says the New York Times writer, Irving Spiegel, against "being carried away by slogans and mass hysteria."

"Carried away by our own emotions we are tempted to exaggerate what is bad enough," he added. The Zionist leader, speaking before 1,000 delegates at the opening session of his organization's 69th annual convention, at the Statler Hilton Hotel, in New York, deplored continuing suppression of the spiritual and cultural rights of Soviet Jews.

However, he emphasized that while protests were necessary, "they should be carried out in an orderly manner so that efforts of private diplomacy should be able to come in uninterrupted."

On frequent occasions in recent years, major Jewish religious and secular groups have staged outdoor demonstrations, in various parts of the United States, as well as meetings in protest against Soviet discriminatory treatment of Jews. Many reports have been issued to depict the steady attrition of Jewish cultural and spiritual life in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Torczyner said that the possibility of Jews' being permitted to leave the Soviet Union "is dependent much more on improved relations between the United States and Russia rather than between Russia and Israel."

The Soviet Union's support of the Arab states, he held, is designed to "prevent any understanding and the development of good diplomatic relations between the United States and the Arabs," says the New York Times. The Zionist leader also voiced strong objection to establishment of a post of adviser on Jewish affairs for President Johnson. There is no such post at the present time but there were advisers on Jewish affairs in previous administrations.

"We consider the problems concerning Israel, its support by our Government, are matters which concern the entire citizenry of the United States and it is a mistake to try to separate the Jews from the common stream of American nationhood," he said.

Governor Rockefeller, in remarks prepared for delivery, cited the achievements of Israel since her establishment as a nation, asserting that "it has revitalized a people and created a nation founded on moral, social and economic equality — a nation dedicated to ending 2,000 years of Jewish homelessness and dispersion."

The Governor voiced his concern that "after 18 years of Israel's existence, her security is still threatened and the reality of her existence and permanence are not yet fully accepted." This was an allusion to current Syrian-Israeli tensions.

Governor Rockefeller said that peace in the Middle East "is inescapably interlinked with world peace."

Joseph W. Greenleaf, the convention's chairman, sharply criticized the Arab states for their failure to open direct negotiations for peace with Israel, says the New York Times. Mr. Greenleaf said that throughout Israel's existence her offer of friendship had met "a rebuff and increased belligerence."

The Zionist Organization of America drew up a program to counteract what it described as "the vicious anti-Semitic and anti-Israel propaganda" which it said was being carried on by Arab students on campuses throughout the U.S. Details of the program were disclosed by Jacques Torczyner, who was chosen unanimously by more than one thousand delegates from various parts of the U.S. to be president again.

Mr. Torczyner named as one of the chief instruments of this propaganda the Organization of Arab Students of the United States. He said it had more than one hundred chapters "and was well financed" by Arab states.

STERN-GOLDSTEIN

The marriage of Miss Janet Goldstein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin N. Goldstein, 104 Leinster Street, Saint John, N.B., to Alan Jeffrey Stern, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Stern, Spring Garden Terrace, Halifax, N. S., was solemnized at Shaarei Zedek Synagogue, in Saint John, on Sunday, June 19, at half-past five o'clock, by Rabbi Abraham Feffer, assisted by Rabbi Isaac Freeman. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white, re-embroidered lace; with an empire waistline; with a matching jacket. Her tulle illusion veil was held by a matching headdress; and she carried a prayer book, with white orchids, and lilies-of-the-valley, tied with narrow streamers. Mrs. George Avery, sister of the bride, was matron of honour. She wore an aquamarine-blue, floor-length, lace gown, encrusted with beads; and the slim skirt finished with a train. Her headdress was a matching circular crown, fashioned in a halo effect, from a spray of gathered tulle. She carried a bouquet of white roses and stephanotis, surrounded by a spring of English ivy. Mrs. Peter Cohn, of Halifax, sister of the groom; and Miss Myra Holtzman, cousin of the bride; were bridesmaids. Each wore an empire gown of jade green, peau de soie, with coat-styled overskirts. Their headdresses were matching peau de soie roses; and they carried floral muffs, covered with tiny stephanotis and puffs of white maline. Beth Avery, and Eden Cohn, nieces of the bride, were flower girls; each wearing ankle-length, white, peau de soie dresses, with jade green medallion trimming; and apron-effect skirts. Their headdresses were white kerchiefs with jade trimming; and they carried miniature floral muffs of jade-coloured carnations and puffs of white maline. Stanley Jacobson was best man. The ushers were: George Avery, and Peter Cohn, brothers-in-law of the bride; Eric Offman, and Norman Ross; all of Halifax. The Synagogue was banked with white daisies, chrysanthemums, gladioli and lilac, with long sprays of white baby's breath, cascading down the standards. Windows, pillars and pews in the Synagogue were decorated with southern oak, white lilacs and branched candelabra; and tall arrangements of these flowers were placed in the sanctuary; and around the canopy, where the ceremony took place, smilax, white daisies and white miniature carnations were used for adornment. Charles Wills, and Bruce Holder, Senior, played the wedding processional music. A reception was held in the Admiral Beatty Hotel. Dr. L. H. Freedman, cousin of the bride, was toastmaster. Stanley Jacobson proposed the toast to the bride. Robert Kanigsberg, Q.C., of Halifax, spoke on behalf of the groom's family. Mrs. Goldstein, mother of the bride, wore a mint-green Alencon lace gown; and her hat was of softly crushed peau de soie, enhanced with petalled roses. Mrs. Stern, mother of the groom, wore an emerald-green, peau de soie ensemble; made with a beaded bodice; and slim skirt. She had an open-crown-headdress. Each had a gardenia pinned to her purse. Mr. and Mrs. Alan Jeffrey Stern spent their wedding trip in Bermuda; the bride going away in a three-piece, coral-coloured ensemble; with black patent leather accessories; with a mauve orchid corsage. They have taken up residence in Halifax. Mrs. Stern received a diploma in education, from Dalhousie University, and is on the teaching staff of Alexandra School, in Halifax. Mr. Stern received the Bachelor of Commerce degree, and the Bachelor of Law degree, from Dalhousie University.

Z.O.A. HEAD URGES ORDERLY PROTEST AGAINST SOVIET

The Arab students, through their chapters, he said, "are distorting the true picture of the situation in the Near East and misinforming their fellow students about the realities of the situation where the Arabs and Syria in particular are now the aggressors trying to bring conflict and war in a part of the world that has been in a precarious state of armed peace for the last ten years."

He said his organization as a countermove would shortly publish literature on this subject and give lectures and hold seminars on campuses around the U.S. He said the Zionist countermove would be aimed at non-Jewish students and faculty and also, says the New York Times, "will involve Jewish students and professors in the problems confronting the Jewish people and Israel."

At an earlier session, James H. Sheldon, head of the Anti-Nazi League, charged that the Arab Information Services in the U.S. to other pro-Arab agencies "are working overtime to influence educational and student opinion."

In a resolution the delegates hailed the Johnson Administration for its decision to sell arms to Israel. Another resolution urged the Government to press for direct Arab-Israel negotiations "to translate armistice agreements into treaties of peace."

The delegates also appealed to rulers of the Soviet Union to "restore its Jewish citizens to a position of equality with all other nationalities in the practice of their religion and culture" and permit them to be reunited with their families and relatives in other lands.

AGNON, REALIST AUTHOR, WINS FIRST NOBEL PRIZE FOR ISRAEL

Mr. Agon is a small, brisk man with light blue eyes and white hair. He speaks with a gentle courtliness and his speech is laced with a dry wit. He is devout and few conversations are not underlined with Biblical references.

Mr. Agon's works have attained the status of classics in modern Israel and are required reading in schools and universities. Many youngsters remain unable to comprehend the changing moods of nightmare and nostalgia that the author weaves through his works.

He is a meticulous craftsman, continually rewriting and even revising from edition to edition. His works have a timeless quality about them, a feeling of having been written hundreds of years ago, reports the New York Times. "The question is whether they are also suitable for this time," he says. "Everything good is beyond time, abstract of time. Everything genuine is always topical."

Nelly Sachs, a slim wisp of a gray-haired woman, sat smiling among roses at her apartment in Stockholm, offering sherry to all who dropped in to congratulate her on having won the Nobel Literature Prize. Yes, she had heard rumors that she might be chosen along with Shmuel Yosef Agnon of Jerusalem but she could not believe them. Her smile waned slightly on hearing that she and Mr. Agnon had been acclaimed as "two outstanding Jewish authors each of whom represents Israel's message to our time."

Perhaps one could say that, she conceded, although she said she felt her work to be more universal. But then, continuing in German, she said firmly:

"Agnon represents the State of Israel. I represent the tragedy of the Jewish people."

Miss Sachs, a refugee from the Nazis, lives in Stockholm and is a Swedish subject.

The bitter lament of her early postwar poems over the sufferings of the Jews has gradually given way to expressions of sympathy for the suffering of all. There have been tones of reconciliation and forgiveness.

On her 70th birthday — she will be 75 on December 10 — she said on a rare visit to Germany that she could believe in the new generation of Germans even though many members of her family had died in concentration camps.

Miss Sachs, who was born in Berlin, was first known as Leonie. She began writing while a teenager and in the decade before the rise of Hitler, attracted attention with her expressionist lyrics, says the New York Times. But these works, a few of which were printed in periodicals of the twenties have been lost.

During the seven Hitler years that she lived in Germany, her name no longer appeared. Her relatives vanished one by one and she managed to flee to Sweden just before the Nazis were about to place her in a concentration camp.

Selma Lagerlöf, a Swedish novelist who won the Nobel Prize in 1909, had corresponded with Miss Sachs for many years.

One of Miss Lagerlöf's final acts just before her death in 1940 was to enlist the aid and influence of the Swedish Royal family on behalf of her friend. Before the end of the year, Miss Sachs and her mother were permitted to leave for Sweden. None of her other relatives survived.

Miss Sachs's father, William, had been a manufacturer with several inventions to his credit. Her formal education, however, did not go beyond a high school and she seems to have been a shy young person who chose to write in private.

She was reluctant to let her poems be published. Stefan Zweig was involved in arranging to have at least one put into print.

After Hitler's downfall, Theodor Adorno, a philosopher and literary critic at the University of Frankfurt, said, "After Auschwitz, there can be no more poetry in German," reports the New York Times. But he later commented, "Sachs has disproved this."

Her poetic theme is profoundly Jewish, drawing on the ancient Biblical story of the wanderers, the hunters and the hunted, brought to intensity by her own experience. But there is no note of condemnation.

This made it possible for Germans to find her a symbol of reconciliation. Last year, she was awarded the peace prize of the German Book Publishers Association, previously won by Albert Schweitzer, Thornton Wilder and Paul Tillich. A message from President Heinrich Lübke said her poems were "works of forgiveness, of deliverance; of peace."

Earlier, the Rhineland city of Dortmund paid tribute to her by establishing an annual Nelly Sachs Prize. Her poetic drama, "Eli", had its first performance there in 1962. Her dramatic works were originally designed for a puppet theater.

Miss Sachs writes only in German. She has published several anthologies, among them "The Habitation of Death" in 1947; and "Eclipsed Stars" in 1945, says the New York Times. There is much about death, as in "Who Emptied the Sand From Your Shoes?" A poem about "The Sand That Israel Brought Home":

"O, your fingers,
Who emptied the sand from your shoes of death,
Tomorrow already you shall be dust
In the shoes of those coming."

Miss Sachs is working on a new dramatic work that she describes as a kind of ballet.

Proposed Formation of Divorce Early Warning System Follows N. Y. Federation Conference

The following report was received from Robert I. Smith, director of Public Relations of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York:

The formation of a DEW (Divorce Early Warning) System for the prevention of marital and family discord and disintegration has been proposed as the result of a two-day conference on "Divorce In The Jewish Community" sponsored by the Synagogue Commission of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of New York at the Harvard Club. The Conference resolved that some means be found to coordinate the helping professions involved: the law, psychiatry, and psychology, social work, and the rabbinate, into a concerted effort for the early detection of symptoms of emotional discord.

It was suggested that a committee be formed of member agencies of the Federation, other social agencies, educators, and rabbinical representatives, to implement the recommendations. The proposal for the development of this early warning system was made in a paper by George Rothman, executive director of the Jewish Community Services of Long Island. He pointed out:

"It is far less difficult to enter a family situation at the beginning than it is after a fifteen or twenty-year war in which all of the persons involved bear the scars of yesterday's battles and the behavioral consequences of chronic emotional distress."

As part of the process of detecting early symptoms of marital break-up and the development of other methods for divorce prevention, he suggested the establishment of a professional group alert to the signs of marital problems in school children; planned programs of pre-marital education in school; group counseling of courting couples; greater inter-disciplinary cooperation between schools and social agencies and among rabbis, social workers, and psychiatrists; the setting up of an interaction inventory to aid the rescue of marriages through either religious guidance, family service, or psychotherapy or a combination of all three.

In other major recommendations, the conference urged: A study to determine the present rate of divorce, separation, and desertion among Jews to obtain a true comparison with past records and with the rate in the general population; Licensing of marriage counselors to eliminate incompetents, quacks, and charlatans; The humanization of divorce laws to eliminate the fixation of guilt upon either marriage partner; Instituting a program of public education into the problem of divorce, its causes and consequences; and Improved mental health education and treatment.

Professor Nathan Goldberg, Professor of Sociology, Yeshiva University, presented "A Sociological View Of The Impact Of Divorce On The Jewish Community" based on the sparse statistical data that exist on the subject since the turn of the century in the United States and several other countries inhabited by Jews.

His data disclose that in Russia in 1897, "the Jewish population had a much higher divorce rate than the non-Jews", with a larger rate among women and among individuals who lived in large cities. Professor Goldberg attributed this higher rate to the difference in outlook and cultural heritage between Jews and the other ethnic groups who, "for historical or other reasons, were less likely to think in terms of love, marital happiness, individualism, human dignity, and parental responsibility than the Jews."

He also pointed out that the Russian Jews of that period had a larger percentage of divorces than the American-born white population of immigrant and native-born parents at the time of the 1900 census.

Surveys taken in various large American population centers since then, particularly in the decade of 1956-1965, indicated, according to Professor Goldberg, that a reversal has taken place and that "divorce, separation, and desertion are less prevalent among American Jews than among others." Among the cities surveyed during this decade were Detroit, Los Angeles, Providence, San Francisco, Trenton, and Washington.

Dr. Nathan W. Ackerman, Clinical Professor of Psychiatry, Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, discussed "Divorce And Alienation In Modern Society" and pointed out that Jewish family life cannot be stereotyped, with acculturated Jews showing one problem pattern and rigidly Orthodox families a far different one. He noted:

"In acculturated, middle class Jewish families divorce comes easy. In Orthodox families legal divorce is still rare, but emotional divorce may become a severe problem. At one extreme, a segment of the Jewish population gets lost in the large community; the values of Jewish life fade away. At the other extreme, the struggle to adhere to Jewish standards and meanings leads progressively to isolation, to a regressive preoccupation with the past and the social and mental health of such families suffers accordingly."

Dr. David R. Mace, executive director of the American Association of Marriage Counselors, summarized the proceedings and presented the resolutions for action. Mrs. Rhoda B. Simon, chairman of the Synagogue Commission's Subcommittee for the Study of Divorce, was chairman of the Conference. Rabbi Jeshaia Schnitzer of Temple Shomrei Emunah, Montclair, N. J., served as co-chairman.

Rabbi Julius Kravetz, Professor of Rabbinics, Hebrew Union College, presented background material detailing the history of divorce among Jews since Biblical times. Dr. Menachem M. Brayer urged that religious law be reinterpreted and new secular law developed to strengthen the bonds of marriage, preserve family life, and correct restrictions on traditional Jewish women who are legally but not religiously divorced.

He also urged the creation of special Jewish Reconciliation Courts, elimination of complications affecting traditional Jewish women seeking a religious divorce, the establishment of religious courts for such divorces instead of permitting individual rabbis to grant them indiscriminately, and the convening of a General Rabbinic Conference of Orthodox authorities to examine the Rabbinic Law of Divorce in a search for "practical exegetic application."

Rabbi Isaac N. Trainin is the director of the Commission on Synagogue Relations of the Federation.

LAW OF RETURN AMENDED BY ISRAEL TO CURB ABUSES

Israel's Knesset (Parliament) amended the passport law this summer to curb abuses made possible by the liberality of the state's Law of the Return. The Law, approved in 1950, enables any Jew who is not a danger to public health, peace or security to settle in Israel. A nationality act two years later, says the New York Times writer, James Feron, afforded citizenship to those arriving under the law. The amendment was prompted by the fact that many Jews arrived over the years simply to obtain a passport and then continued to live elsewhere.

Moreover, they have been able to renew the passports without returning. Now both rights have been curtailed. The new law states that while an immigrant still has the right to citizenship, he may not get his passport until he has been in Israel for one year. Some exceptions will be made.

Those living abroad for five years or more probably will have to demonstrate their ties to Israel or return, even for only a visit, to obtain passport renewal.

An Interior Ministry official estimated that there were 80,000 to 110,000 holders of Israeli passports living abroad, or about five per cent of the population. He said the Government had no idea how many were permanent residents but he estimated that seventy-five to eighty per cent had dual nationality.

He indicated that the Government probably would not apply its new powers rigidly. He said that an Israeli who maintained contact with relatives in Israel or with his local consulate, for example, probably would not have to return to have his passport renewed.

The new law seeks to end embarrassment to the Government abroad. In many cases passport holders' only ties with Israel ended when they received their passports at the end of a one-week or two-week period.

A Knesset committee member said, for example, that there were about 150 Jewish families in Tokyo, about 100 holding Israeli passports. In many cases they are passports of convenience. Some Israelis have felt that the Law of the Return was approved with more enthusiasm than wisdom.

It had been amended only once before, adding the right of the Government to bar those "likely to endanger public peace" to the restriction against those "likely to endanger public health or security."

The intention was to discourage fugitives from justice from obtaining sanctuary, says the New York Times. The law also provides for the exclusion of any person acting "against the Jewish people," but as far as Ministry officials can recall this has never been invoked.

FORGIVE IS ONE THING; FORGET IS ANOTHER THING ALTOGETHER

By Leslie Roberts, broadcast on CJAD, Montreal

The anxiety of Chancellor Erhard's government to get nuclear arms for West Germany, literally opposed by everybody, is understandable, but not half as understandable as world-wide opposition to it.

The Soviet Union, for example, wouldn't trust a nuclear weapon in East German hands and still treats East Germany, Communist though it may be, infinitely more sternly than it does the rest of its European bloc of Communist countries.

The United States obviously isn't going to give Erhard such weapons. If he switches to the DeGaulle side of the NATO argument, he is even less likely to get them from France, whether from DeGaulle or any successor.

The British, for their part, would probably pull out of Western Germany altogether if the U.S. were to weaken to Bonn's persistent requests. Germany, West, that is, has been readmitted to what may be called the family of free nations, but even this with a considerable reluctance.

Moreover, the feeling exists on both sides of the Curtain that all Germans, East as well as West, are working towards their reunification as Germans and nobody outside the country can stomach the idea of a reunified Germany possessed of all the weapons of horror.

Forgive is one thing. Forget is another thing altogether. Nobody in his right mind would even consider handing Erhard the makings of nuclear warfare and the reason is clear: the record.

Moreover, if the United States, which has often shown more relaxed attitudes to Germany than any European power has, were to give in to Erhard as a NATO partner, Washington knows only too well it would lose every other ally it has in Europe. It's as simple as that and Chancellor Erhard had better forget it, politically embarrassed though he may be.
